Meeting the Needs of a Multipolar Society

In the increasingly complex landscape of a multipolar society, there is a growing demand for proficient professionals skilled in researching and analyzing diverse quantitative and qualitative data sources. This expertise is crucial for informed decision-making across various sectors, including government, politics, technology, engineering, environmental management, and social services. ANALYST project is committed to producing high-quality educational materials designed to cultivate the specific knowledge, skills, and abilities necessary for intelligence and strategic planning.

Main objectives of ANALYST project

- Enhance collaboration and knowledge-sharing across Europe
- Elevate the role of intelligence, security, and strategic planning
- Develop a comprehensive profile for intelligence analysts
- Shape tailored training programs to meet labour market demands, integrating professional tools for hands-on experience
- Establish a European Intelligence Analyst Network

The initial meeting in Rome focused on discussing the key objectives of a European Intelligence Analyst Network and strategies to enhance collaboration and knowledge sharing across the EU. After conducting a transnational study involving Belgium, Italy, Spain, and Greece to assess the development of intelligence analysis models and professional training options, the Research & Intelligence Analyst Job Profile, among the main deliverables of the project, aims to identify the essential knowledge, skills, and aptitudes for intelligence analysts to perform effectively and impact society and provide a solid role description. Partners have just released the official project website while the consortium met in Valencia to review the desk research and brainstorm on the Intelligence Analyst Training Program and MOOC.

Looking forward, the project consortium will focus on organising the summer school and internship programme. Last but not least, the project team is working towards hosting the International ANALYST Conference, which seeks to connect professionals and integrate ideas into the policy arena.
